FORSTER

OXFORD

'After Herder is a terrific work, of interest not just to historians of philosophy and contemporary philosophers of language but also . . . to pragmatists. Clear and engaging, it canvasses ideas on language from several extraordinary but underappreciated German philosophers of the late eighteenth century, including . . . Hamann, Herder, and Schleiermacher . . . Herder really was a visionary philosopher of language. His greatest hope, as Forster explains, was to make philosophy more relevant and useful to others.'

Robert J. Stainton, International Review of Pragmatics

'This is a hugely important book. First, it shows that Herder was not only the inventor of modern social anthropology but also of modern hermeneutics, philosophy of language and translation theory; second, it shows that Herder is superior to more recent philosophy of language.'

Michael Mack, Times Higher Education

Review of After Herder and German Philosophy of Language:

'magisterial . . . [Forster] explores a rich and interesting vein in the history of philosophy. Equipped with massive erudition and a sharp eye for logical distinctions, he presents its achievements in a detailed, but systematic and digestible form. His defence of the doctrines he unearths is invariably tenacious and for the most part compelling. These books are a model both of scrupulous interpretation and of precise and rigorous argument.'

Michael Inwood, Mind

'Michael Forster's two interconnected books . . . are vigorous and innovative invitations to look at [the history of German philosophy] quite differently. The central figure in Forster's account is Herder; indeed, the two books are the most philosophically sustained, searching, and convincing account of Herder's philosophical achievement to date . . . [These] are books to be reckoned with and will amply repay the most serious attention from historians of philosophy, philosophers of language, and social theorists.'

Fred Rush, Notre Dame Philosophical Reviews

Michael Forster is Glen A. Lloyd Distinguished Service Professor in Philosophy at the University of Chicago and recipient of a 2012 Alexander von Humboldt Professorship.
